Action Research at Work in the Literacy Classroom: Reflection, Collaboration, and Publication

This interactive workshop is geared for teachers, coaches, supervisors, and teacher educators who are interested in how an inquiry approach can enhance literacy learning for students and teachers alike. The presenters will engage the participants in an exploration of the principles and practices of action research and the connection to the literacy classroom. They will highlight the role of reflection and collaboration and share a variety of ways for teachers to share or publish their findings with interested colleagues. Participants will leave with ideas for their own action research projects.

PRESENTERS: Mary Buckelew and Janice Ewing

Mary Buckelew is a Professor of English at West Chester University and the retired Director of the Pennsylvania Writing and Literature Project.

Janice Ewing is an adjunct Professor of Graduate Education at Cabrini University and a Co-Director of the Pennsylvania Writing and Literature Project.

Teacher and student inquiry has been at the heart of their work together with learners of all ages. They invite you to join them in this exploration of action research in the literacy classroom.
